wall of honor tells the story

Within the past four months, museum donors have placed 15 family members on the Danish Immigrant Wall of Honor. Here is one young donor's inspiration to be sure his family's story is told:

"My Iowa grandmother made me aware of our Danish ancestry - in grade school she even taught me how to count to 10 in Danish. At Christmas she would always make kringla and other Scandinavian desserts, though by the time I was a kid it had been mixed with Norwegian so you might find lefse and æbleskiver on the smorgasbord.

While I was studying history at university, she gave me some books about Iowa counties that featured biographies of our ancestors - farmers and business people who immigrated from Sjælland and Lolland to north-central Iowa.

After she passed away, my sister and I went on a 'family history' tour of Denmark. That trip inspired me to start looking online for an organization that supported Danish heritage in the US - which is how I found the Museum in Elk Horn.

Memorializing six of my Danish ancestors on the museum's Wall of Honor was an inspiring experience that brought together relatives from California, Iowa, Oregon and as far away as Santiago, Chile.

Even after generations, the descendants of those Danish pioneers still celebrate their heritage with family reunions - as they've done continuously for the past 89 years.

I feel honored to be associated with the museum and appreciate its dedication to recognizing and memorializing the contributions of Danes in America."

museums advocacy day

Angela Stanford, Curator of Collections and Registrar, traveled to Washington D.C. on February 24-25 to participate in Museums Advocacy Day. This event, organized for the past six years by the American Alliance of Museums, gathers museum professionals to Capitol Hill to speak with legislators about issues and funding needs facing museums, libraries, zoos, gardens, and other non-profits. Angela, who also serves as the president of the Iowa Museum Association, was one of almost 350 delegates from across the United States, and spent the day meeting with Representatives and Senators from Iowa. Museums Advocacy Day is an opportunity to present a united statement to legislators, and to share with them both hard numbers and personal stories about how museums and other non-profits are positively impacting education, economies, and the general health of our communities and culture.

welcome new danish interns

Sofie Krøgh Nielsen and Helle Skovsgaard Christensen have joined the museum team for the spring/summer! Both ladies are looking forward to learning about Danish immigration and experiencing Danish American culture.

Sofie is from Strandby and is studying at Aarhus University working toward her Masters in Experience Economy. She will be working on developing new school resources, installing the exhibition, Nude Vases, Cubist Faces: Modernism at Rookwood Pottery and doing research for future exhibitions. In addition, she will be presenting the April Brown Bag Lunch Program on Daily Life in Denmark in 1864, based on her experiences working in the open-air museum "Den Gamle By" (The Old Town) in Aarhus, Denmark.

Helle is originally from Silkeborg and is studying at the University of Copenhagen and working toward attaining her Masters in Information Science and Cultural Dissemination. Her bachelor's degree is from Aarhus University in English and Visual Culture. She will be working at the Genealogy Center, processing incoming and Special Collections materials.

new 'must-have' spring jewelry looks in the shop

Stylish and socially conscious, Smart Glass Jewelry is made completely from recycled glass bottles in the Atlanta studio of Scandinavian artist Kathleen Plate using a method of transforming bottles so innovative she even has a patent on the process!

Smart Glass necklaces and earrings vary in color depending on the type of bottle used in its creation; for example, amber comes from beer bottles, cobalt from vodka, pine from red wines, antique clear from Coca-Cola bottles, and more!

New pieces from John Wind Maximal Art have arrived in the shop and feature a variety of today's trendiest looks including the Classic Universal Monogram motif, proclaimed by Accessories Magazine as a brilliant take on the monogram trend. The Universal Monogram gives the look of a custom piece without the wait and is an abstract design that is perfectly 'one size fits all'!

John Wind emigrated to the U.S. from Israel in the 1960s – en route, his family detoured to Copenhagen and bought a house full of Danish Modern furniture and a wardrobe of Georg Jensen jewelry for his mom. This inspired a lifelong appreciation for Danish design, and in the time since that trip, Wind has returned to Copenhagen to attend seminars and create ongoing connections.

Spring of 2010 marked the beginning of the textile inventory process with former American intern Brittany Deeds reorganizing the box labeling system and inventorying approximately 2,000 pieces over 15 months. The project was put on hold until July and August 2013 when former American intern Natalie Smith and current American intern Madeline Mongar worked together to complete 400 pieces. Madeline continued the project on her own, finishing the remaining articles of clothing and household textiles in February. Data including measurements, descriptions, conditions reports, and photographs were attained for each individual object in the 3,000 piece textile collection and entered into computer software. In addition, each piece was put into a proper storage box with acid-free tissue.

The textile collection features a wide variety of pieces including folk costumes, aprons, military uniforms, hats, wedding apparel, baptismal gowns, needlework, and much more. Having each unique piece accurately documented allows the curatorial staff to properly care for each object as well as know what can be used for exhibition. The completion of this project is also important and timely, as the textile collection in its entirety will be relocated to the new curatorial center addition that will be completed this summer.

tivoli fest 2014 prince and princess contest

Monday evening, March 24, the museum's Bro Dining Room will be filled to capacity with excited children accompanied by their encouraging parents, siblings and grandparents. Each candidate will be interviewed in true pageant fashion. The K-3 grade school contestants' entry forms are placed in Viking hats with a Prince and Princess chosen in a random drawing.

This year's Tivoli theme is "Denmark on the Prairie". Each entry form includes a coloring page for the child to draw what the theme means to them.

The Prince and Princess will ride along with the King and Queen in the Tivoli Fest parade, to be held on Saturday, May 24.

photos and stories needed

Veterans of '64 is the title of the 2014 Genealogy Center photo exhibit. Linking to this year's major museum exhibition, Schleswig-Holstein: Turmoil on the Danish-German Border, we are looking for photographs and stories of both immigrant military veterans of the 2nd Dano-Prussian War and of individuals (male and female) who lived through the war and its aftermath--when Denmark lost over a third of its land mass after the Danish government had to cede the duchies of Slesvig and Holsten to Germany.

A Permission to Display form should accompany submissions. The form is attached to this E-Newsletter, may be requested by mail (by emailing librarian@danishmuseum.org), and are available on our website by navigating to Library & Genealogy > Photo Gallery.
