Danish churches, many of which were constructed between 1200 and 1500 CE, are the frequent subject of photographers visiting Denmark. One thinks of the typical Danish church as being white, with the typical 'stair-stepped' roofline, but there are many different architectural variations and colors, as well as churches with square towers and tin or tiled roofs. Even if you cannot make a pilgrimage to an ancestor's home area in Denmark, you can still see the church where he or she was born, confirmed, married or died if you know the name of the parish in which an event took place by going to http://dis-danmark.dk/kirkeimg/. Click on ‘Sogne’ (parishes) at the top of the page, then on the letter of the alphabet the parish starts with, and then lastly on the parish name. A thumbnail image will appear; one more click will result in an enlarged photograph of the church, which can then be printed or saved to enhance your family history. Below we see, respectively, Tingsted parish church in Maribo County, Grinderslev parish church in Viborg County, and Poulsker parish church on the island of Bornholm:
